The ratiroad and the telegraph solved the problem of speedy transaction of business between the far-separated cities of America, and the mimegraph was invented to expedite business at home—in the offices where much of this enormous traffic is generated and where all of it must be controlled and irected.

The mimeograph is an invaluable aid to agents, corporations and business men. With it you can reproduce from 1,500 to 3,000 copies of an original autograph letter or typewritten order or circular. The copies are clear and stront, the difference from the original is imperceptible. It will save you many a printer's bill.

Thousands of wide-awake business men have aiready availed themselves or this userul invention. Call upon us at any time and we will it pleased to explain its use and convince you of its utility. It is not expensive. 3,000 copies of an original autograph lette

THE SPEAKERSHIP CONTEST. Four of the Candidates Now in the City-

Four of the speakership candidates-Mills, McMillin, Springer and Bynum-are in Washington and it is expected that they will all be here within a week or ten days. The situation is such as to make every man feel that he has a chance of success, and those who have not now such a following as to, in itself, give great promise of victory count a great deal upon the assumed fact that the fighting has all yet to be done. It is believed that comparatively few members have absolutely pledged themselves to any candidate, and that they are awaiting developments after they get to Washington two weeks before the meeting of Congress. It was expected that the result of the fall elections would have some influence over the canvass, but nothing has developed to indicate any particular candidate who may ex-pect to be benefited by that result. THE CHIEF CONSIDERATION.

One of the consequences of the fall elections, it is generally believed, will be to strengthen the Page 7

MB. M'MILLIN ON THE ELECTIONS.

Representative McMillin says he feels satisfurther in the discussion of the speakership contest. Speaking of the late elections, special and limited class of persons over whom the united states has peculiar and pre-eminent purisdiction, viz: Senators, Representatives, and leaving outstanding $4,309,350.

further in the discussion of the speakership contest. Speaking of the late elections, where the said to a STAR reporter that in his opinion the result showed that the democrate were making a growing fight, that they were on the incoming tide, and that they might expect a constant accession of strength. An analysis of the ilections would show that locally a constant accession of strength. An analysis of the elections would show that locally a constant accession of the law imposed restrictions upon a special and limited class of persons over whom the United States has peculiar and pre-eminent jurisdiction, viz: Senators, Representatives of the incoming tide, and that they might expect a constant accession of strength. MR. A. K. BROWNE'S ARGUMENT. Mr. Browne in opening his argument today and building estimated at $200,000; fully Representative McMillin says he feels satisfied with the situation, but refuses to go any further in the discussion of the speakership contest. Speaking of the late elections, he said to a STAR reporter that in his opinion the result showed that the democrate were making a growing fight, that they were on the incoming tide and that they might expect.

Mr. Browne in opening his argument today directed attention to the fact that the eleventh section of the law imposed restrictions upon a special and limited class of persons over whom the United States has peculiar and pre-eminent jurisdiction, viz: Scnators, Representatives, delegates, officers, clerks and employes of the United States. These people were the United States. These people were said fully insured.

States.

Mr. Browne insisted that the sole purpose of Congress was to protect officers and employes of the United States against extortion and solicitation. Congress proceeded very cautiously when it came to deal with the liberties of those who were not government employes. It was not made unlawful for a mere citizen to solicit any other mere citizen when and where be pleased. It was not made unlawful for a mere citizen to solicit an office holder at his home or on the street. The mere citizen was simply forbidden to enter the room in which an officeholder might be occupied in the discharge of his official duties.
